

Students' Rights

A Quick-Reference Guide

By virtue of the processes by which learning occurs, people rightfully engaged in a program of learning are thereby in a set of interconnected processes, where they may seek and are obliged to provide. Since if one or more functions or processes is messing then the outcome will not be learning, if a person is permitted to participate (or receive or obtain an educational item), they are no less permitted to pursue any and all of the due processes that underly the intended result and outcome: learning.

It is important that students, parents, and communities understand what the basic functions of an educational apparatus are, and that it is their role to actively monitor these vital processes.

There are times when students, parents, and communities can be put on the defensive, apologizing to a serving institution.

There is no justification for refusal on the part of a school.

Formal & Explicit vs. Informal and Implicit

If tasks are being performed and there are no objections, additional formal steps may be inhibitory. If there are questions, outstanding needs, problems, etc., the roles, their actions, and the coordinated leeway for initiative (taking) that corresponds to the needs and deficiency should engage.

Feedback & Evaluation

Tests, Quizzes & Evaluations

- Formative
- Summative
- Pre-Post Assessments
- Retesting [unless physically or temporally impossible]
- Contesting the results of any evaluation that do not meet accepted or tautological requirements for the soundness of data, test construction, data analysis, and transparent reporting.
- To give feedback to the other members of the client-system about overall status or particulars.

Client-System

- To be allowed to fulfill your role(s) in the client system.
- To require those in other roles to perform the functions of those roles.
- To be actively involved in person-role-allocation.

Student:

- To have an IEP (individualized Education Plan) or equivalent.

Class:

- To have a Class Plan
- To have access to the Class Plan

Key Questions to ask:

How will I be evaluated?

How are the evaluations you use significant by international standards? (regarding the significance of the result of the test, often characterized by the probability or confidence level that the results were not arrived upon by accident, and that the results are based upon falsifiable assertions.)

How do you by policy side in the following trade-offs and choices:

- depth & breadth
- one schedule vs. student's path
- What is your pedagogy?
- How is your client system network designed?

what is the plan and system

what are the teacher's notes

where is this going?

what is expected of me?

what can I do to make the whole process work better?

what can/should I ask for help with?

what generally works and does not work for most students in terms of study and lesson methods to make lectures, not hear them.

to write narrative text, not read one.

to have learning project and inquiry based experiences that give both tangible and human feedback venue-task-mode-schedule coordination and balance:

full and balanced client-system (learning-community) engagement

To be notified of, reminded of, and kept on schedule with, a schema of conventionally required material.

To compose expository narratives so as to comprehend through dynamic creativity, not to hear to understand by absorbing as input.

demand a study plan including demand evaluation

- quantitative ()
- qualitative
 - (this is vital and not to be dismissed based on a pseudo-science fundamentalism of "no subjectivity")
- formative (throughout the course/contract/academic-session)
- summative (end of course/contract/academic-session)

learning and education does not "just happen"

if you are being sold a product, and the explanation comes down to that: "a teacher will be there and you can work it out, it will just happen in the class" depending on the specific context, that could be a very bad sign of fraud or negligence.
