Variation Example: "Look" vs. "Read" vs. "Point" (meaning is the same for these three)

pointing to pointing at pointing towards

look at

look directly at something in view (Look at this fish!)

look on

(something you cannot see now)
look on page two, to find it look on the table at home, may it's there.
or think about the future, look forward in time,
"looking on" = future research

read on

continue: "keep reading"
don't stop (drive on, walk on)

read to a limit: "Read to page five then stop."

read at

Read at a slow pace. (not an object.)
"read at your leisure" (as you like it)

read this

read this PPT slide

vs.

look at

look at this

look to

"get help from"
He looked to his co-worker = he got help from his co-worker.
"looking to next year" maybe a casual way of saying "looking on to next year"

look on

- a place you cannot see "look on page four, to find the answer"
- look into the future
- continue looking

vs.

point to (same)

point at (same)

~~point on (does not exist)~~
