

"The" & "A" The Rule of The Silent "Some"

A Quick-Reference Guide

Version 1 - The rule of the silent "some":

If you can say "some,"
then you can use no-word.

Example: I am watching some TV. = I am watching TV.

Version 2 - The rule of the silent "some":

General references to uncountable things often have no word, very specific references often use "the."

Examples:

I am drinking water.	= I am drinking some water.
I am watching TV.	= I am watching some TV.
I am buying snacks.	= I am buying some snacks.
I am making dinner.	= I am making some dinner.
I am having wine.	= I am having some wine.
I am meeting with friends.	= I am meeting with some friends.

Version 3 - The rule of the silent "some":

In most cases, when a "the" or "a" is not used,
it was replaced by a silent "some,"
unless it was replaced by a possessive noun or pronoun (or demonstrative pronoun).

Examples:

Normal	=	the/a	=	Please give me the tea.
No-word	=	Silent "some"	=	Please give me () tea.	=	Please give me (some) tea.

or

Please give me John's tea.
Please give me her tea.
Please give me this/that tea.
